—Kenji is staying with a host family in the United States. He is talking with his host brother, Michel, a few weeks before Christmas.

Kenji : Michel, I have a question.

Michel: Sure, Kenji. What is it?

Kenji : Well, it's about Christmas trees. Does your family have one every year?

Michel: 41. In fact, we're going to get one tomorrow. Would you like to come along?

Kenji : Sure. Are you going to cut down a tree?

Michel: Oh no, you don't understand. We won't buy a cut tree. 42

Kenji : You mean a tree with roots, in a pot?

Michel: Yes, exactly. We'll have it in the house for Christmas.

Kenji : 43

Michel: We'll plant it in the garden outside. Do you see that line of trees in the yard? Those are our Christmas trees from past years.

Kenji : That's great! But does every family get a living tree, and then plant it?

Michel: 44. Most families buy a tree that was cut down.

Kenji : What happens to those trees after Christmas?

Michel: People just throw them away.

Kenji : That's very sad!

Michel: We think so, too. 45

第5問 次の英文を読んで、問1～問10の[46]～[55]に入れるのに最も適当なものを1つずつ選び、記号で答えなさい。

Life in the South Pacific Islands

The Pacific is the largest ocean in the world and has more than 5,000 islands. There are many different countries but together they are called the Pacific Islands. The Pacific Islands are always warm and the weather is the same for most of the year. From April to November, there is less rain and there is some cool wind but the weather is still warm. The people of the Pacific Islands came from Asia a long time ago. We know this because a few of the words in their many different languages are the same as words in Asian languages. In the following story we can see the life in a Pacific Island village many years ago.

A day in the life of a Pacific Island village.

The life of the village begins when the sun comes up. The young men shout. They call to one another to go to their work. When the sun begins to shine, birds call and the noise of the sea is mixed with the noise of the village. Babies cry and little children get up out of their beds and walk down to the sea to wash their faces. Older children go to find their friends to go fishing. The whole village opens its eyes and goes towards the sea.

Some of the men get ready to take the boats for fishing. Through the village, a noise calling the young men together is heard. Some go with their sticks to work in the village garden. Others work in their own gardens. Little children are too hungry to wait for the breakfast, so they eat food which mothers made the day before. Women carry washing to the river at the far end of the village while the older girls go fishing or make cloth.

In the houses the older women and the mothers with young babies sit and talk about the day. The old men sit by themselves. Some families are already hard at work cooking the food. Children are running to carry water. They get leaves to put the food in before it is cooked.

At twelve o'clock, it is so hot that children run into the houses. Women wear hats to keep the sun away from their faces. Everything is quiet and when the sun slowly moves towards the sea, someone shouts out 'a boat'. The men bring their boats out of the sea and on to the land. They are tired because the day has been hot. The fish are put on the floor, or in front of the houses. The men come home from the gardens. They go together to a big house to drink and talk and then everyone eats the food that the women have made. The day is almost finished.
